

PREPARED FOR LOUISE O'SULLIVAN, YELLOW HARBOUR

Build the Yellow Harbour marketing team you never had

A short proposal, from our call. I would start with one agent: an Outbound Agent that works through the register of charities and writes individually to the CEOs you want as clients, grounded in a messaging framework we build with you and David. It is a three-week build for €9,000 + VAT, plus your own software subscriptions of roughly €350 a month, and afterwards your own team runs it. This document explains what it does and how it works.

Quality first, then automate

IRELAND'S MARKETER OF THE YEAR, 2022

Before I build anything, I ask one question: what does really good look like here? Not what AI can do, but the best version of this marketing, and the level of quality I would want to stand over.

So I start where I always have. If there were no AI at all, what team would I hire to do this properly? A strategist to set the positioning and the messages, someone doing the outbound work of finding and writing to the right people, and someone running the campaigns and keeping score. I map that team first, then build exactly it, with agents instead of hires.

Twenty years in brand is what tells me where the bar sits: Head of Brand at 02 Ireland, then CMO at the National Lottery, Head of Brand at Indeed and Miro, both global roles. Positioning, messaging and tone are written first, then built into everything the agents make.

WHO I WORK WITH

Moloco

Heineken

Norcros

Alltech

Smurfit

Hostelworld

Eaton Square

Weatherbys

"His command of marketing science as well as his instincts for great thinking and ideas are, in my opinion, superb."

Peter Field · The Godfather of Effectiveness, author of The Long and the Short of It

"Paul reported into me as Head of Brand when I was at Indeed. I have learned more from him than anyone else in my career."

Paul D'Arcy · CMO, Moloco. Former CMO at Miro and Indeed

What we would build for Yellow Harbour

This comes from our conversation. Yellow Harbour has doubled in the last year with very little marketing behind it, you have around fifty clients and the capacity for a hundred, so the job now is the sales pipeline. Your market is well defined: the SME charity with an income between €500,000 and €1 million, where the CEO holds the grants, and there are thousands of charities on the public register to work through. Until now that pipeline has been built by hand: interns working through the register, finding the CEO, finding an email address, adding them to the newsletter. It worked, and it is slow. And because a charity's decision goes through its volunteer board, it takes around three months from first conversation to a signed client, so the pipeline has to be kept full continuously rather than in bursts.

-
- 01 Positioning and messaging. You do not have a positioning problem. What is missing is only that it is not written down. A two-hour interview with you and David is converted into a messaging framework: the positioning, the tone of voice, and the insights about your customers. Every message the agent writes is grounded in it, which is what keeps the quality high when the volume goes up.
-
- 02 The Outbound Agent. The work your interns did by hand, done properly and continuously. It filters the register to your profile, identifies the CEO at each charity, researches the organisation and the person, and writes a message that could only have been sent to them, on LinkedIn or by email from your own mailbox. Louise or David reads every message before anything goes out.
-
- 03 The rest of the team, later. A Copywriter for the newsletter, a Lifecycle Agent for the segmentation you have not had time for, a Website Builder, a Ghostwriter for LinkedIn, a Search Agent, and a Campaign Manager to keep score. Each is a separate, later decision, and we would only add one once the Outbound Agent has proved itself.
-

The parts, and what each one is for

STEP ONE

Positioning and messaging

I said on our call that I do not think Yellow Harbour has a positioning problem, and I meant it. You are clear about what you do, who it is for, and why it is worth paying for. What is missing is only that none of it is written down as a working set of messages that other work can be built on.

So we would start with a two-hour interview with you and David, and convert it into a messaging framework: the positioning, the tone of voice, and the insights about your customers, the busy CEO who knows the grants are not getting the attention they deserve. Every message the Outbound Agent writes is grounded in that framework. Later, the same framework serves the newsletter and the website, so everything says the same thing.

Related reading: The 95:5 rule, the day-one list · What is mental availability

STEP TWO

The Outbound Agent

Outbound is a job a person does. Someone has to work through the register of charities, find the CEO at each one, learn enough about that organisation to have something worth saying, and then write to them properly. Yellow Harbour has done this by hand, and it helped double the business, but it is slow, and doing it at volume has traditionally meant a full-time hire, an agency, or a freelancer. The Outbound Agent carries out that whole job, and it writes every message individually.

It filters the register to your profile, identifies the CEO, and researches the organisation and the person: the filed accounts, the grants and funders they already list, the campaigns under way, and what the CEO has said publicly. The message is written from that research, so it could not have been sent to anyone else. If an opening could go unchanged to a different charity, it is rejected and rewritten.

It works across LinkedIn and email. Emails go one at a time from your own mailbox, never as a bulk blast, and your Mailchimp newsletter stays as it is. There are three approval points: you approve the list, Louise or David reads every message in full, and you start the campaign. Each morning the agent reports who replied, and when a CEO replies with interest it briefs you on the background and drafts the response with your booking link.

LATER, WHEN YOU ARE READY

The rest of the team

Each of these is built the same way, grounded in the same messaging framework, and each is a separate decision for later: a Copywriter for the newsletter and campaign copy, a Lifecycle Agent for the segmentation and targeted campaigns run through your existing Mailchimp, a Website Builder that makes changes by being asked in plain English and can produce a landing page for one prospect before you meet them, a Ghostwriter for LinkedIn posts in your and David's names, a Search Agent for how Yellow Harbour shows up in Google and in AI-generated answers, and a Campaign Manager that tracks all of it in one place. None of this displaces the work your designer does. She keeps doing the graphics, and these give her better material to work with.

One recommendation, and the cost

I would start with one agent rather than a whole system: the messaging framework and the Outbound Agent, built and handed over in three weeks. It is a contained piece of work, the results are measurable in replies and meetings, and it gives you a clear view of how we work before you commit to anything larger. It is also worth setting the cost against the alternative. Doing outbound properly with a person is a full-time job, and a full-time hire costs in the region of €60,000 a year before employer costs. This is a three-week build for €9,000, and afterwards your own team runs it.

THE RECOMMENDATION

The messaging framework and the Outbound Agent

- › The messaging framework: a two-hour interview with Louise and David, converted into the positioning, tone of voice and customer insights that every message is grounded in
- › The Outbound Agent, working through the register of charities on LinkedIn and email, writing every message individually
- › Three approval points, so nothing is sent and nothing is spent without you
- › Everything configured for Yellow Harbour, handed over, documented, and your team trained to run it

€9,000 + VAT

Three weeks from sign-off. Software subscriptions are separate, held in your name, and listed opposite.

THE PLAN

What happens in the three weeks

- › Week one: the messaging interview with you and David, the framework written up, and the list criteria agreed
- › Week two: the agent built and connected, the first batch of charities researched, and the first messages drafted for your review
- › Week three: your corrections taken in, training for you and your team, handover, and the first campaign approved and started
- › After that it runs in your own accounts. If you would like us to stay involved while your team gets comfortable, that can be arranged separately

WHAT THE PRICE COVERS

The strategy work, the build, the handover, and training your team to run it. Paul does the building himself and then hands the system over, so that Run with Foxes does not become a permanent cost or a dependency.

WHAT IT DOESN'T: THE ONGOING TOOLS

The software the agent runs on, held in your name and your ownership: your own Claude account (around €90 a month), Clay for contact enrichment (around €160 a month), Apify for gathering public data (from about €25 a month), and HeyReach for LinkedIn sending (around €70 a month). Roughly €350 a month altogether, agreed with you before anything is spent, and cancellable month to month. Mailchimp stays exactly as it is for your newsletter.

Book a time to chat

Thirty minutes is enough to talk it through with you and David. Book a time at cal.com/paul-dervan-mjfd50, or email me directly at paul@runwithfoxes.com.