

PREPARED FOR STEPHEN LEDDY, HEARWELL HEALTH

Build the HearWell Health marketing team you never had

One engagement, in two parts. First I work as your marketing partner: we settle the strategy and the plan together, finish the brand work, and I build the systems the plan calls for, handed over in your own tools and your own name. Then, optionally, a senior head stays on the work month to month. This is the plan, and how it works.

Quality first, then automate

IRELAND'S MARKETER OF THE YEAR, 2022

Before I build anything, I ask one question: what does really good look like here? Not what AI can do, but the best version of this marketing, and the level of quality I would want to stand over.

So I start where I always have. If there were no AI at all, what team would I hire to do this properly? A marketing lead to set the strategy and the plan, someone producing the volume of content thirty-six locations consume, someone running the campaigns, and someone making sure every clinical claim is right on every asset. I map that team first, then build exactly it, with agents instead of hires.

Twenty years in brand is what tells me where the bar sits: Head of Brand at 02 Ireland, then CMO at the National Lottery, Head of Brand at Indeed and Miro, both global roles. Positioning, messaging and tone are written first, then built into everything the agents make.

A marketing plan first, then the systems that run it

This comes from our conversation. You are opening five clinics and thirty-one satellite locations inside GP medical centres, and you launch at the end of October or in November. You have done more of the thinking than most companies ever do: the positioning, the tagline, four audiences with a message for each, and a set of ground rules governing how your clinical claims and your own naming are allowed to be used. What is missing is the plan that turns it into a market, and the systems to execute that plan at the volume thirty-six locations will demand.

One thing shapes everything else. At one hundred and ten euro a month you earn a patient back over years, while the traditional model banks five and a half to six and a half thousand on day one. That means an incumbent can outbid you in any auction you enter, every time, and your model does not merely benefit from cheap acquisition, it requires it. You already half know this, which is why the GP satellites are described as the engine of the rollout. The plan has to be built around that fact rather than around buying attention.

- 01 The marketing strategy and plan. Which audiences to reach and in what order, how the GP referral engine is fed rather than hoped for, where money goes and where it does not, and the creative and messaging that carries it. Your call to action is settled here, along with the argument underneath it.
 - 02 Brand strategy, positioning and guidelines. The layer that decides how everything looks, sounds and behaves in public, written as rules that can be enforced rather than remembered, and made repeatable across thirty-six locations and everyone who will be writing for you.
 - 03 The website, rebuilt as a system. You have started a site of your own. We would rebuild it properly, so that a new page, a clinic opening or a campaign page is produced from a sentence rather than a development cycle, with assessment bookings running through it end to end.
 - 04 Then the systems the plan calls for. I have a range already built and proven. Which ones HearWell Health needs is a decision that falls out of the strategy and plan, not something to fix now. When I do the strategy, I work out how it gets executed, and that is what tells me which systems are worth building for you.

The parts, and what each one is for

PART ONE · THE THINKING

The marketing strategy and plan

Before anything is built, we decide how HearWell Health goes to market. Not a positioning document that sits in a drawer, a practical strategy and execution plan. I work as your marketing lead through this, not as a supplier delivering a document. You told me you are stuck on the call to action. That is the right thing to be stuck on, because it is where the whole argument has to compress, and it cannot be solved before the strategy is settled. It gets solved here.

Thirty-one of your locations sit inside GP premises, so referrals are the rollout rather than a channel. The plan treats clinicians as an audience with their own argument and their own material. And because most of the people who will eventually become your patients are not looking today, and your own figures say they wait seven to ten years, the plan has to keep you in the running with people who are not yet in the market.

PART ONE · THE THINKING

Brand strategy, positioning and guidelines

Inside the plan we complete the brand work. You already have the healthy-ageing reframe, hEARsphere™ as the reason to choose you, the Signature Programme as the offer, and rules covering how your clinical evidence and your own naming may be used. What we build on top of that is the layer that decides how all of it looks, sounds and behaves in public, and then makes it repeatable across thirty-six locations.

That matters more here than in most businesses, because your category is regulated in practice if not in law. A claim used without its qualification, or a programme described with the wrong word, is not a style problem. So the guidelines are written as rules that get enforced on every asset rather than as a document people are asked to remember.

One decision worth making early: the logo is a Canva draft and not where you want it to land, and you have a lease agreed in Dublin 4 with a fit-out under way. Changing a web page is cheap and changing signage is not, so the identity decision wants to be made before the signage is ordered.

The build

PART ONE · THE BUILD

The website

Building a website has traditionally needed a designer, a front end developer and someone to manage both. We do that work with AI instead. You have started a site of your own, and what we would do is rebuild it properly, as a system rather than a page, so that it carries the launch and keeps producing pages long after it. The web version of this proposal contains a page designed from your two-page brief, so you can judge the standard yourself.

The argument it makes is deliberate. Your problem, in your own words on the call, is that you are selling a product nobody wants. Apple did more to make a device in the ear desirable than the hearing industry managed in thirty years, and they did it by treating it as an object people want rather than a thing people need. So the page leads on the device and on what the programme gives back, with your Index as the proof that it is working.

PART ONE · THE BUILD

The systems that run the plan

A plan is worth what the execution is worth, so the second half of the work is building the systems that run it. The range I would choose from: a Brand Guardian that checks every asset against your own rulebook before it goes out; the Website Builder; a Lifecycle Agent running the hundred and twenty day hyper-care programme you described; a Content Agent for the volume thirty-six locations consume; an Advertising Agent that researches, plans and makes the ads while a person still presses go; an Outreach Agent for GP referral relationships and for recruiting audiologists; a Ghostwriter for your own voice in public; a Search Agent for how you appear inside AI answers; and a Campaign Manager keeping score.

This is not a menu to choose from. It is one piece of work: the plan, and the systems the plan calls for, built around your brand and handed to your team in your own tools and your own name.

One engagement, in two parts

This is not a menu to choose from, it is one piece of work with two phases. Part one is me working as your marketing partner, and that is where most of the value sits. I take the marketing lead role you do not currently have: we settle the strategy and the plan together, finish the brand work, and then I build the systems the plan calls for. Part two is optional, and it only exists if you want a senior head kept on the work after the build is live. The plan is the deliverable, and it holds whether you build every system or only some of them. Everything is complete and handed over ahead of your launch.

PART ONE

Me as your marketing partner, the plan, and the systems to run it

- › Me in the marketing lead role through the launch, working with you rather than delivering to you: the person you think out loud with, and the one accountable for the plan being right
- › A marketing strategy and execution plan: how you go to market, how the GP referral engine is fed, where the budget goes, and how it is measured
- › The brand work completed: brand strategy, positioning finished, and guidelines written as rules that can be enforced
- › Your call to action settled, along with the argument underneath it
- › The website, built and yours
- › The AI systems the plan calls for, scoped with you, built around your brand and handed to your team

€15,000 plus VAT

A one-off project, complete and handed over ahead of your launch. Your own tool subscriptions are separate, in your name, sized with you first.

PART TWO · OPTIONAL, AFTERWARDS

Keeping a senior head on it, month to month

- › A senior marketing head kept on the work every month, once the build is live and handed over
- › Training and steering whoever runs it day to day
- › New creative, fixes and adjustments as the launch teaches us things
- › Marketing analysis, and the plan revised on what the numbers actually say
- › Optional, and month to month

€3,000 per month, plus VAT

Entirely optional. If your team is comfortable running the system, you do not need it, and that is the intended outcome rather than a failure.

WHAT THE PRICE COVERS

Me in the marketing lead role, the strategy and the plan, the brand work, the systems built to run it, the handover and the training. You own the system and the strategy it runs on.

WHAT IT DOESN'T

Your own tool subscriptions: Claude Code, hosting and an email platform, which stay in your name and your ownership. A modest, predictable software bill, agreed with you before a euro is spent. Media spend is separate and decided inside the plan.
