

PREPARED FOR REBECCA O'DRISCOLL, MERVUE LABORATORIES

Half a day on AI fluency with your marketing team

A half day with the Mervue marketing team, structured on the six parts of my AI fluency course, with examples from each. By the end the team can see the whole territory of what AI fluency in marketing covers, from the daily habits through to the things nobody could do at all until recently, and you can see which parts of it matter to Mervue.

Quality first, then automate

IRELAND'S MARKETER OF THE YEAR, 2022

Before I use any of these tools I ask one question: what does really good look like here? Not what AI can do, but what the best version of this marketing would be, and the level of quality I would want to stand over. The tools come after that, and they are judged against it.

That is also how I teach it. A session that runs through tools one by one leaves a team with a list of product names and no judgement about when to trust any of them. Fluency is the thing worth having, and it is broader than the tools. It is knowing what these systems are good at, what they are poor at, how to set work up so the output holds its quality, and what is now possible that was not possible before.

Twenty years in brand is what tells me where the quality bar sits: Head of Brand at O2 Ireland, then CMO at the National Lottery, then Head of Brand at Indeed and Miro, both global roles.

What we would cover

You said you wanted to cover the basics first, and then be specific about what you need. The difficulty with that is that the basics of AI in marketing are wider than they look, and it is hard to know what to ask for while you can only see part of it.

So the half day is structured on the six parts of my AI fluency course, and I take examples from each. We would not run the whole course in an afternoon, and this is not that. The structure is there because it gives you the full picture of what AI fluency in marketing covers, from the daily habits through to the things nobody could do at all until recently. Where it helps I point the examples at the kind of work your team does, so the ideas land against something familiar. The session itself is about the fluency, not about any one piece of Mervue work.

The 80/20 of AI

A small number of habits get you most of the way with AI in marketing work. Talking to it instead of typing. Keeping a campaign in one project instead of scattered chats. Showing it the content you liked rather than describing it.

02

Slow, then fast

An intentional way of setting about marketing work. Techniques for getting clear on what good looks like, for fast research, for the metrics, for building in defences against hallucination. All of it before the work starts, so what follows is quick and consistently good.

03

Create adjacent value

A deep dive into the wide range of marketing capabilities you can now build with AI, and how to get them to a genuinely competent standard. No need to stay specialised as a brand, performance, product or research marketer. You add to what you are already good at.

04

System thinking

Once you can create adjacent value, you can build the whole system. A website, a chatbot, a calendar, the email, the research that lands before a call. Wired together into one experience for the customer, end to end.

05

Building marketing agents

The processes, structures and tools I've used to build agents that do real marketing work, whether that is research, outbound, writing emails or coaching a brief. Getting the workflow right, and getting the quality right.

06

Tackle difficult problems

The other modules are about doing your work faster and better. This one is about the marketing problems and opportunities that were never possible at all, even for a big team. Now is the time to be ambitious and take them on.

What you get afterwards. A written note of where Mervue sits against each of the six, and what is worth doing first. You said you would be able to be more specific about what you need once you knew more about what these tools can do. This is the document that lets you do that, whether you brief me, another supplier, or your own team.

- › Length. Half a day, roughly four hours including a break.
- › Who. Up to eight people. Your marketing team, and I would suggest including your head of nutrition and your commercial manager, since they already use these tools.
- › Where. Your office in Cork, or online if that suits the team better.
- › What you need to bring. Nothing to prepare. If there is a piece of work the team is in the middle of, tell me beforehand and I will point some of the examples at it.

What it costs

THE SESSION

A working half day, and the note that comes out of it

- › The half day with your team, structured on the six parts of the AI fluency course
- › Preparation beforehand, so the examples are pointed at the kind of work your team does
- › The written note afterwards: where Mervue sits against each of the six, and what is worth doing first

€800

plus VAT

Dates to suit your team. If you would rather do it online, the price is the same.

WHY IT IS PRICED THIS WAY

This session's job is to let you decide what happens next, so I have priced it to be an easy decision rather than a budget exercise. It is deliberately a small commitment.

Some of what comes out of it your team will do in-house once they have seen how. Some of it you may want built for you, and that tends to be the pieces that only work if they are set up properly once. That is a conversation for after the day, when you know what you are asking for.

WHAT IT DOES NOT INCLUDE

Your own Claude subscription. A Teams plan gives your team shared access and the right security settings for company material, and it is a modest monthly cost held in Mervue's name. I will advise on the setup as part of the session, at no charge.

Pick a date that suits the team

Email me at paul@runwithfoxes.com with a couple of dates that work and we will get it in the diary.
