

PREPARED FOR STEPHEN LEDDY, HEARWELL HEALTH

Build the HearWell Health marketing team you never had

One engagement, in two parts. First I work as your part-time CMO: we settle the strategy and the plan together, finish the brand work, and I build the systems the plan calls for, handed over in your own tools and your own name. Then, optionally, a senior head stays on the work month to month. This is the plan, and how it works.

Quality first, then automate

IRELAND'S MARKETER OF THE YEAR, 2022

Before I build anything, I ask one question: what does really good look like here? Not what AI can do, but the best version of this marketing, and the level of quality I would want to stand over.

So I start where I always have. If there were no AI at all, what team would I hire to do this properly? A marketing lead to set the strategy and the plan, someone producing the volume of content thirty-six locations consume, someone running the campaigns and reporting on how they are doing, and someone checking that the clinical claims and the naming are correct on everything before it goes out. I map that team first, then build exactly it, with agents instead of hires.

Twenty years in brand is what tells me where the bar sits: Head of Brand at O2 Ireland, then CMO at the National Lottery, Head of Brand at Indeed and Miro, both global roles. Positioning, messaging and tone are written first, then built into everything the agents make.

A marketing plan first, then the systems that run it

This comes from our conversation. You are opening five clinics and thirty-one satellite locations inside GP medical centres, and you launch at the end of October or in November. You already have the business plan. What is missing is the marketing plan that turns it into a market, and the systems to execute that plan at the volume thirty-six locations will demand.

One thing shapes everything else. At one hundred and ten euro a month, you recover the cost of winning a patient over years. The traditional model takes five and a half to six and a half thousand on day one. So wherever you and an incumbent are bidding for the same person, they can pay more than you and still come out ahead. That is why the GP satellites matter as much as they do, and it is why the plan has to be built on referral and reputation rather than on buying attention.

- 01 The marketing strategy and plan. Which audiences to reach and in what order, how GP referrals actually get generated, where the money goes and where it does not, and the creative and messaging that carries it.
 - 02 Brand strategy, positioning and guidelines. The layer that decides how everything looks, sounds and behaves in public, written as rules that can be enforced rather than remembered, and made repeatable across thirty-six locations and everyone who will be writing for you.
 - 03 The website, rebuilt as a system. You have started a site of your own. We would rebuild it properly, so that a new page, a clinic opening or a campaign page is produced from a sentence rather than a development cycle, with assessment bookings running through it end to end.
 - 04 Then the systems the plan calls for. I have a range already built and proven. Which ones HearWell Health needs is a decision that falls out of the strategy and plan, not something to fix now. When I do the strategy, I work out how it gets executed, and that is what tells me which systems are worth building for you.

The parts, and what each one is for

PART ONE · THE THINKING

The marketing strategy and plan

Before anything is built, we decide how HearWell Health goes to market. That means a practical strategy and execution plan rather than a positioning document. I work as your marketing lead while we do it, so it gets decided with you rather than handed to you. You told me you are stuck on the call to action. It is a hard line to write, because it has to carry the whole argument in a few words, and it cannot really be settled before the strategy is. We settle it as part of this work.

Thirty-one of your locations sit inside GP premises, so referrals are how the rollout works. The plan treats clinicians as an audience in their own right, with their own argument and their own material. And because most of the people who will eventually become your patients are not looking today, and your own figures say they wait seven to ten years, the plan has to keep you in the running with people who are not yet in the market.

PART ONE · THE THINKING

Brand strategy, positioning and guidelines

Inside the plan we complete the brand work. You already have the healthy-ageing reframe, hEARSphere™ as the reason to choose you, the Signature Programme as the offer, and rules covering how your clinical evidence and your own naming may be used. What we build on top of that is the layer that decides how all of it looks, sounds and behaves in public, and then makes it repeatable across thirty-six locations.

That matters more here than in most businesses, because your category is governed in practice even where it is not in law. If a claim goes out without its qualification, or the programme is described with the wrong word, the problem is a regulatory one rather than a cosmetic one. So the guidelines are written as rules that get checked on every asset rather than as a document people are asked to remember.

One decision worth making early: the logo is a Canva draft and not where you want it to land, and you have a lease agreed in Dublin 4 with a fit-out under way. Changing a web page is cheap and changing signage is not, so the identity decision wants to be made before the signage is ordered.

The build

PART ONE · THE BUILD

The website

Building a website has traditionally needed a designer, a front end developer and someone to manage both. We do that work with AI instead. You have started a site of your own, and what we would do is rebuild it properly, as a system rather than a page, so that it carries the launch and keeps producing pages long after it. The web version of this proposal contains a page designed from your two-page brief, so you can judge the standard yourself.

The argument it makes is deliberate. Your problem, in your own words on the call, is that you are selling a product nobody wants. Apple has done more than the hearing industry to make a device in the ear something people are happy to be seen wearing, by treating it as a piece of technology people choose. So the page leads on the device and on what the programme gives back, with your Index as the evidence it is working.

PART ONE · THE BUILD

The systems that run the plan

The plan only counts for what gets executed, so the second half of the work is building the systems that run it. The range I would choose from: a Brand Guardian that checks every asset against your own rulebook before it goes out; the Website Builder; a Lifecycle Agent running the hundred and twenty day hyper-care programme you described; a Content Agent for the volume thirty-six locations consume; an Advertising Agent that researches, plans and makes the ads while a person still presses go; an Outreach Agent for GP referral relationships and for recruiting audiologists; a Ghostwriter for your own voice in public; a Search Agent for how you appear inside AI answers; and a Campaign Manager keeping score.

This is not a menu to choose from. It is one piece of work: the plan, and the systems the plan calls for, built around your brand and handed to your team in your own tools and your own name.

One engagement, in two parts

This is not a menu to choose from, it is one piece of work with two phases. Part one is me working as your part-time CMO, and that is where most of the value sits. I take the marketing lead role you do not currently have: we settle the strategy and the plan together, finish the brand work, and then I build the systems the plan calls for. Part two is optional, and it only exists if you want a senior head kept on the work after the build is live. The plan is the deliverable, and it holds whether you build every system or only some of them. Everything is complete and handed over ahead of your launch.

PART ONE

Me as your part-time CMO, the plan, and the systems to run it

- › Me in the marketing lead role through the launch, part time rather than full time, working with you rather than delivering to you: the person you think out loud with, and the one accountable for the plan being right
- › A marketing strategy and execution plan: how you go to market, how the GP referral engine is fed, where the budget goes, and how it is measured
- › The brand work completed: brand strategy, positioning finished, and guidelines written as rules that can be enforced
- › The website, built and yours
- › The AI systems the plan calls for, scoped with you, built around your brand and handed to your team

€15,000 plus VAT

A one-off project, complete and handed over ahead of your launch. Your own tool subscriptions are separate, in your name, sized with you first.

PART TWO · OPTIONAL, AFTERWARDS

Keeping a senior head on it, month to month

- › A senior marketing head kept on the work every month, once the build is live and handed over
- › Training and steering whoever runs it day to day
- › New creative, fixes and adjustments as the launch teaches us things
- › Marketing analysis, and the plan revised on what the numbers actually say
- › Optional, and month to month

€3,000 per month, plus VAT

Entirely optional. If your team is comfortable running the system, you do not need it.

WHAT THE PRICE COVERS

Me in the marketing lead role, the strategy and the plan, the brand work, the systems built to run it, the handover and the training. You own the system and the strategy it runs on.

WHAT IT DOESN'T

Your own tool subscriptions: Claude Code, hosting and an email platform, which stay in your name and your ownership. A modest, predictable software bill, agreed with you before a euro is spent. Media spend is separate and decided inside the plan.
